"Hello—Good Luck—Good-By."

There isn't a soul to trade a word;
There isn't a thing to do;
There's only the country rolling back,
A sleepy porter and you
It's a kind of a lonesome proposish,
This speeding across the land,
You're almost tempted to Brodie off—
Then, somebody waves a hand!
A Mick with a pick, a farmer's wife,
A kid with a wink to his eye
A girl in white on another train—
"Hello—good luck—good-by."

A rattle, a flash, and they fade away;
Forever they're gone—but you
Feel twice as good as you did before,
Things really aren't half so blue!
And you wish somehow that they each could know

How fine was the wave of the hand!
Here's to a few of those blessed souls—
Knowing they'll understand:

You Mick with your pick, you farmer's wife,
You kid with the wink to your eye,
Miss Girl in white on the other train—
"Hello—good luck—good-by!"

—Joe Jefferson O'Neill.

Plans were made at the reunion of the veterans of the Union and Confederate armies, held at Memphis, Sept. 27th, for a peace jubilee and general reunion of the blue and gray, to take place at Washington in 1913. Gen. John H. McDowell, commander of the Army of Tennessee, subdivision of the United Panicky times do not mean so much to the man who owns "his own patch" as they do to those who are dependent on factories for employment and the means of a livelihood. He can live in comparative comfort regardless of the timidity of money. There are no serious "shut downs" in the employment of the man who grows what he needs to eat. But now is the time to buy the patch in Southeast Missouri.—Dunklin News.

Dreaming of football scrimmages in his berth in a train bound for New York, Chas. Burrows, who hails from Joplin, Mo., enroute to New Haven to enter Yale, continued his journey, little the worse for the "scrimmage."

Southeast Missouri was represented at the Springfield, Illinois, State Fair by some of our progressive farmers and business men who were on the ground with samples of Cape county products and opened the eyes of the thrifty Illinoisans, who were surprised at the products of fine grain, etc. The world has yet to learn of the real prospects of Cape county soil and the desirability of locating here. The cattle industry is also a big factor in this county and the specimens on exhibition at the recent fair testify to the truthfulness of this statement.
